

Shore Up Your Financial Literacy

We get much of our information online, from official sources to content creators. When it comes to your finances, it's important to get information from credible sources.

Here are some sites that offer information you can trust:

Federal Financial Literacy and Education Commission (FLEC)

Government's website dedicated to financial education. (mymoney.gov)

Jump$tart Coalition

Resources to advance financial literacy and financial equity, especially among youth. (jumpstart.org)

Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis (FRED)

Economic data including inflation, unemployment, exchange rates and more. (fred.stlouisfed.org)

U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission

Information and tools for individual investors to help make investment decisions. (investor.gov)

Federal Trade Commission

Advice for consumers on credit, loans, scams, and identity theft. (ftc.gov)

Freddie Mac

Mortgage rates and national housing market data. (freddiemac.com)

Investopedia

Advice and education on a wide variety of subjects. (investopedia.com)

Tax Day

For most Americans, April 15 is when individual income tax returns are due to the federal government (and in many states as well). Check out irs.gov for more information.

If you need a referral to a financial professional, just let me know and I'll connect you to one in my network. And, oh, by the way...I'm never too busy for you or any of your referrals!